WHITE RIVER MARBLE

INTRODUCTION

This type of White Marble is fine grained snow-white dolomite which gives delicate and luxury appearance.

It is used for exclusive projects like hotels, palaces, villas and many commercial buildings.

One of the main advantages (besides the pattern) is the durability in extreme weather conditions. It superbly reflects sunrays and heat, therefore it stays cool at very high temperatures, also the unique inner structure of the stone makes it resistant to frost at very low temperatures.

The White River Marble is available in A and B selection, based on the natural pattern characteristics.

HONEY ONYX

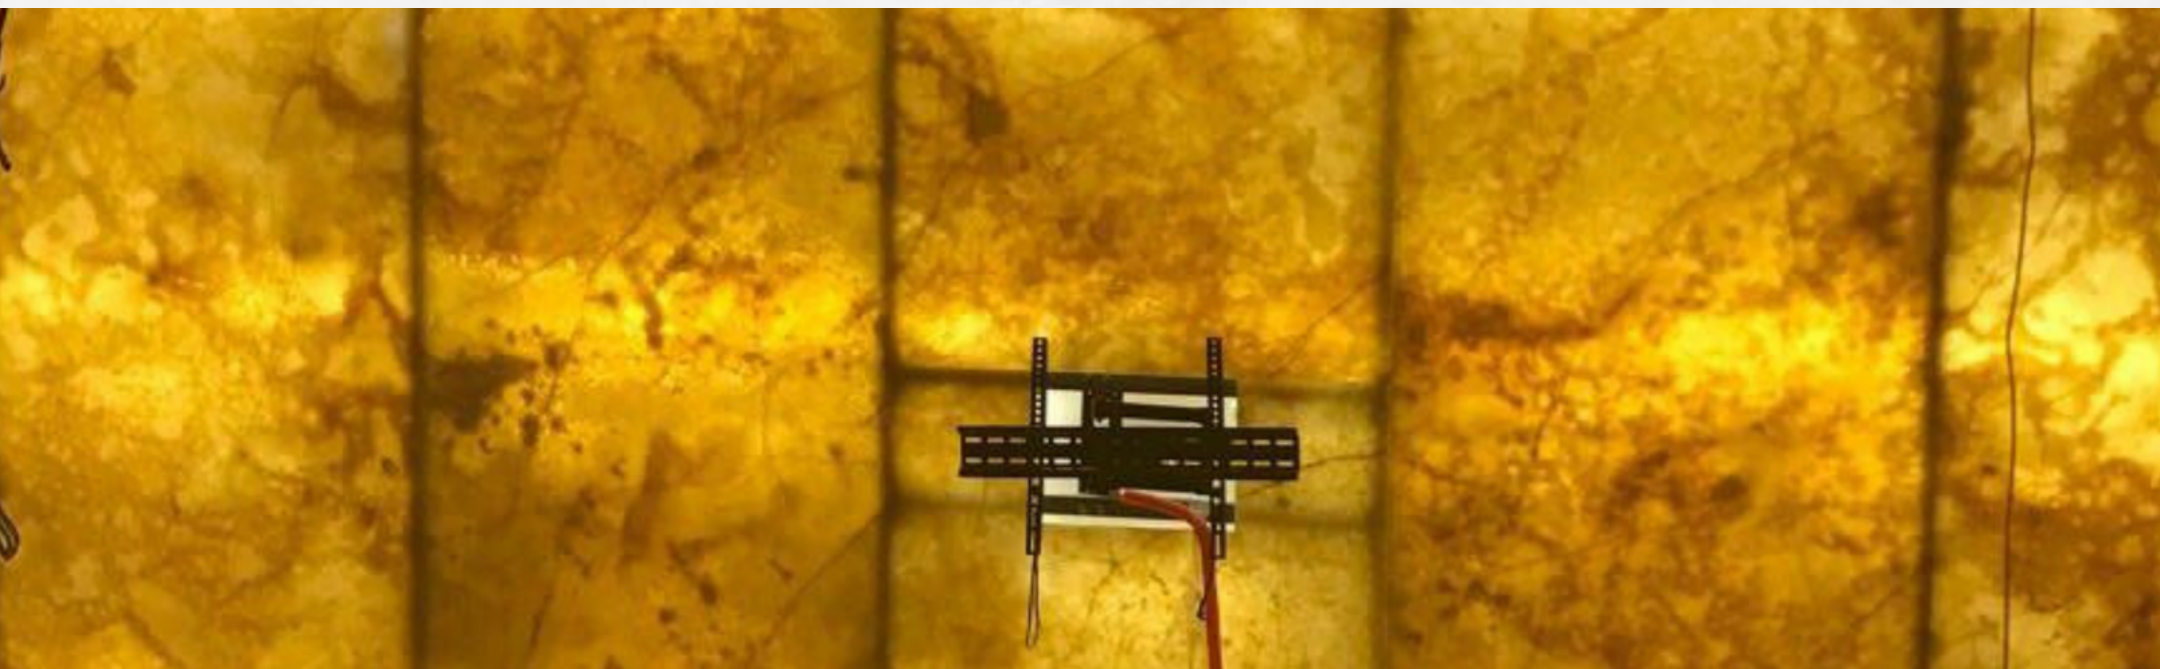

INTRODUCTION

Onyx is a unique and exotic stone that leaves breathtaking impression. it's stunning appearance features rich parallel layers with contrasting shades which are formed naturally over the course of thousands of years.

It's remarkable one-of-a-kind style enchants luxury and glamour.

The lavish beauty Honey Onyx caught the attention of civilizations dating back to ancient Egyptians and Macedonians who utilized the material in it's full glory for making jewelry and creating extraordinary carvings.

A special feature that only certain Onyx materials have is the ability for the slab to be backlit (translucency.) Our Honey Onyx is one of the best when it comes to this feature, it is a fairly inexpensive process which truly allows the stone to exhibit it's full beauty and it stands out as a focal point of any room.

TRAVERTINE

INTRODUCTION

Travertine is a natural stone with beautiful variations, during the formation from a middle stage limestone, evolving into marble, the material has been highly affected by forces of underground springs and waters. It contains voids (air pockets) of various sizes caused by carbon dioxide bubbles that were trapped during the formation of the stone which occurred over the course of million years.

These voids truly lend Travertine a depth that cannot be found in other types of tiles. Romans used this material for building temples and masterpieces, including the Coliseum and other great architectural wonders such as the Sacre-Coeur Basilica in Paris.

Travertine has a subtle elegance which vibrates with old-world charm, from rustic to refined. This natural stone brings unique warmth and a touch of history.
